OVERVIEW

Victoria is Co-Chair of the firm's Government Relations Practice Group. A distinguished and highly awarded attorney with noted successes in high-stakes, precedent-setting cases, Victoria gives her litigation, health care, governmental relations and white-collar criminal-defense clients responsive, civil and innovative counsel. Always remaining accessible, providing prompt attention to pressing problems and avoiding cookie-cutter solutions, she works to minimize her clients' worry while advancing their business objectives.

Notably, she successfully challenged a Rhode Island law that had required employers to provide health insurance to employees receiving workers' compensation benefits. The precedent-setting decision—affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court—struck down a law that had been considered one of the most controversial and costly for Rhode Island businesses.

Additionally, Victoria's professional and civic service includes important posts: President of the Rhode Island Bar Association; the first woman in Rhode Island history appointed Executive Counsel to a governor; Vice Chairperson for the Rhode Island Parole Board for 20 years and Chairperson of the R.I. Health Services Council, the advisory board to the Director of the Rhode Island Department of Health which decides those matters involving new health care equipment, new institutional health services, and the licensing of health care facilities. Recently, the Health Services Council approved the sale of Landmark Medical Center, a 214 bed hospital located in Woonsocket, RI to Prime Healthcare Services.

Adler Pollock & Sheehan is a strong firm. They worked and partnered with me until everything was resolved to my satisfaction. Victoria Almeida was a constant professional, and demonstrated her true understanding of the law and my rights as a client. She is an extremely talented and gifted lawyer, I have highly recommended Adler Pollock & Sheehan and Victoria Almeida to my clients and friends.

– Charles P. Iacono, Vice President of Philanthropy & Community Relations, Home & Hospice Care of Rhode Island

REPRESENTATIVE MATTERS

- In a case of first impression, Victoria successfully defended the former Rhode Island Senate President on ethics charges. The Rhode Island Supreme Court ruled that the Rhode Island Constitution's speech in debate clause barred the Ethics Commission from charging a legislator for how he or she participated in the legislative process and voted on legislation.
- She recently represented a business person in a highly sensitive criminal matter, where a conviction would have destroyed his reputation and business. Within 72 hours she had the case resolved – without a hearing or criminal record for her client.
- Victoria successfully defended the Rhode Island Senate in both state and federal court in a voting rights case due to her strategy in successfully identifying and retaining the necessary trial experts needed to establish the constitutionality of the Rhode Island Senate Redistricting Plan.
- She served as the trial attorney for an insurance company in the Rhode Island Supreme Court case Corrente v Fitchburg Mutual Fire Insurance Company, 557 A.2d 859, wherein the court held, in a case of first impression, that in a first party claim against an insurer, the bad-faith claim must be bifurcated from the breach-of-contract claim at trial.
- She successfully challenged a Rhode Island law – resulting in a precedent-setting decision – that had required employers to provide health insurance to employees receiving workers' compensation benefits. The law had been considered one of the most controversial and costly for Rhode Island businesses. Upheld by U.S. Supreme Court.

SEMINARS / PUBLICATIONS

- Frequent lecturer and author, in various publications, on trial techniques, legal ethics and insurance law.
